Things to Think When You Choose the Perfect Basketball Backboard for Your Space and Skill Level.

Assess Your Available Space.

Before buying backboards of basketball assess your space. A large driveway or a cozy backyard. Room size will greatly impact your choice. For an arena like experience select a full sized 72 inch backboard for larger spaces. Small backboards like 44 inch or 54 inch may give a terrific game without taking up too much space.

Consider Your Skill Level and Playing Style.

Lets discuss you the player. Do you want to improve your free throws or bank shots like a pro. Player style and skill level should determine backboard choice. Beginners and casual players may prefer polycarbonate or acrylic backboards.

These materials are weatherproof and rebound well. They are also cheaper, which is perfect for beginners. Intermediate or advanced players may choose a tempered glass backboard. The pros use this for a good reason.

Think About Durability and Maintenance.

Your backboard will be outside 24/7. It will see rain, snow and sun. You should prioritize durability. Polycarbonate backboards are durable and low maintenance. They are wonderful if you live in extreme weather or worry about errant shots.

Acrylic backboards are a compromise. They are stronger than glass and perform better than polycarbonate. Your backboard will last for years because they don't yellow. Ensure your tempered glass backboard is correctly placed and supported. Glass provides the best playing experience but needs more maintenance.

Don't Forget About Adjustability.

Finally consider an adjustable height backboard system. Buying for a family with growing kids or wanting to lower the hoop for slam dunks will benefit from this functionality. Most adjustable systems offer height adjustments from 7.5 to 10 feet. Simple crank or pneumatic mechanisms let you modify the height without much effort.
